Finishing my thesis is a welcome occasion, and I could not have reached it without the advice and support of many people. First and foremost, I must thank my advisor, Dr. Marianne Wokeck. During our meetings she brought clarity to my tangled ideas and guided me as I thought through my research. Her thoughtful suggestions led me to approach my analysis with new perspectives and reminded me that when it comes down to it, I am writing about human beings. I also appreciate the constructive feedback that my committee members, Dr. Giles Hoyt and Dr. Nancy Robertson, provided at the beginning and end of my writing process.

Many of my primary sources are located at the IUPUI Special Collections and Archives, where I spent a summer delighting in the discoveries made within archival boxes. Thank you to Greg Mobley, who first guided me through the holdings of the archives, and the rest of the archives staff for their assistance. I am also grateful to the IUPUI Max Kade German-American Center for supporting my research.

My thesis developed throughout several graduate courses. Thank you to those professors who offered suggestions ranging from relevant sources to writing strategies, while also teaching me to be a better historian. I also received helpful feedback from many of my fellow students. Thank you especially to Abby Curtin, who read through an entire draft of my thesis.

Finally, this thesis was made more bearable and pleasurable to write thanks to the moral support of family and friends. In particular, my public history friends have been there for me throughout the entire process. Thank you for offering encouragement, commiserating during the stressful times, and joining in celebrations of history victories.
